Amidst the slew of dreadful news this week you may have missed one remarkable story. Teenager Austin Appleby of Australia swam for hours to get help for his mother and siblings when they were swept out to sea. Austin's feat has been described as "superhuman".

Austin himself said "I don't think it was me who did it. It was God the whole time." He kept himself going by praying, singing Christian songs and thinking about his friends and his loved ones. He also promised the Lord that he would get baptised.

Amazingly, Austin reached land and was able to get help before passing out with exhaustion.

Rescuers were just in time to find his mother, brother and sister.

The story had a happy ending.

Human beings have incredible resources. God has made us 'fearfully and wonderfully'. (Psalm 139:14). The Winter Olympics start this week. I'm sure there will be incredible and beautiful feats of strength, skill and endurance.

Yet undoubtedly his faith in God was one of the factors that enabled a young lad to keep on swimming until he found help. Courage, determination and love are all part of this story. There are many tales of the worst in human nature - but there is hope that we can know something better.
